STATEMENT

I saw ship #40, flown by Lt. Rosencrans, feather number 2 engine about 25 minutes before target time. It lost altitude very fast, and dropped its bombs in a valley. He did not turn around, but continued on into Germany. At the time the fighters hit us I lost track of it, but it was under control when I last saw it.

/s/ Lee J. Fitzpatrick
Cpl, 767th Bomb Sq

To the best of my knowledge and remembrance, this is what happened to B-24 number 40, flown by Lt. Rosencrans, 23 August 1944.

I was in the tail of the plane in number 6 position of B flight. "40" flew number 7 position. Just before the IP, I noticed one engine was giving a little trouble – just which engine I'm not sure, but I believe it was number 2. "40" gradually dropped out of formation and to the rear of two flights following us. (Fighters had been attacking for some time and I had seen at least one B-24 go down, so some of the incident may be slightly confused in my mind.)

At about this time another attack developed from enemy fighters, and much of my attention was directed to them. Number 40 had, by this time, feathered his bad engine. Other fighters made a pass at the position of C flight where number 40 was flying. After watching the fighters, I looked back a few seconds later. A B-24 was in trouble to the left of where number 40 had been flying earlier. I could not make out the numbers of any of the planes in this area at this time, but I believe it was Lt. Rosencrans' plane. It was circling very sharply and losing altitude very fast. Finally the B-24 leveled off and started a true course parallel to us, and flew for a few seconds. Suddenly he nosed down again. I saw three chutes open, and later saw two more chutes. I am not sure whether they came from the crippled ship or not.

/s/ Elmer R. Pruitt
S/Sgt., 767 Bomb Sq.

On Wednesday August 23 we were flying in number 2 position of B flight. Ship number 40 was flying number 3 position. Long before reaching the target, number 40 dropped from number 3 and began flying number 6 position. About twenty minutes before target time, number 40 left number 6 position. The next I saw of it, it was a couple of thousand feet under us, had number 2 engine feathered, and then dropped its bombs in a valley. It then headed under our formation. We were then attacked by fighters and soon I saw a ship coming from where ship number 40 had gone a few minutes before. Its left wing was on fire from the tip to number 2 engine. The plane was in level flight, and suddenly six cutes came out. In the next couple of seconds the ship turned on its back and nosed down in a spin. That was the last I saw of ship number 40 because I continued my search for fighters.
