History for Month of November

The month of November found the members of the Squadron setting up their various departments and getting accustomed to their new home at Hammer Field. The accommodations provided the group were an excellent morale builder after spending a month of “roughing it” in tents at Wendover Field, Utah.

The Group was welcomed into the Fourth Air Force by Brig. General Connell, Commanding General of the Fourth Bomber Command. Following his speech, Colonel Glantzberg, 461st Group Commanding Officer, introduced the members of his Headquarters Staff and the Squadron Commanders of each Squadron to the men.

Shortly after our arrival here, the second phase of our training got under way. The planes and their crews started bombing missions; men attended lectures and qualified on the firing range. Every man went over the infiltration course where they simulated real combat by having dummy bombs explode around them and fired live ammunition above their heads.

There was a large increase in the personnel and combat crews for the month of November. At the beginning of the month we found 308 officers and enlisted men and 13 combat crews. At the end of the month we had 492 officers and enlisted men and 18 combat crews.

Early in the month we found the members of the Squadron mourning the death of little “redline”, the Squadron mascot, who was killed by a truck. During his two short months of life, “Redline” had become endeared to every member of the organization.

Twice during the month we found a change in Squadron Commanders and Operations Officers. 1st Lt. Sandall was replaced by Major Yurkanis as Squadron Commander while Captain Briggs replaced 1st Lt. Smith as Operations Officers. Later in the month Major Yurkanis was replaced by 1st Lt. Book as Squadron Commander and 1st Lt. Smith replaced Captain Briggs as Operations Officer.

The Squadron participated in Group reviews and inspections every week. The officers and men dressed in their best uniforms and made a proud appearance for the organization. Toward the end of the month a marked improvement was noted in the personal appearance of the men.

The 22nd of November was a day of great sorrow throughout the Squadron, when it mourned the death of 2nd Lt. Edward J. Drucker, killed when one of our planes crashed near Tonopah, Nevada. 2nd Lt. Reginold Tribe, pilot of the ship, is in the hospital with injuries received in the crash. The rest of the crew parachuted to safety.

Toward the end of the month the Squadron started making preparations for POE. Men were required to mark all their clothing and have all their records up to date. As we neared our goal, that of actual combat with our common enemies, the high morale of the men was not only noticeable but was felt by everyone.
